Pen & Quill Opening for Breakfasts

For the convenience of residents of nearby cities, particularly business and industry people, the Pen & Quill in Manhattan Beach has inaugurated new dining features and extended its hour of service in the restaurant and cocktail lounge.

Now open daily from 7 a.m., breakfast service was this week introduced by the management. Temptingly featured is an array of suggestions ranging from deluxe egg and omelette dishes to waffles, French toast and old-fashioned butter-milk pancakes.

The Pen & Quill has also instituted Sunday Brunch. A diversity of specialties of a quality on par with the restaurant's reputation are available on this special Sunday menu.

New closing time for the cocktail-lounge is 2 a.m.

The demand for the new services developed as a result of general business-industry growth in the surrounding areas and the recent opening of the adjoining Pen & Quill Hotel.

FOR 30 YEARS . . . James E. Wright, left, guard at U.S. Steel's Columbia-Geneva Division Torrance Works, is congratulated by Fred Brunner, assistant superintendent of industrial relations, upon his 30 years service with the corporation.

Law in Action

Your duty as a "responsible" relative to care for a parent, child, or a husband or wife never ends. Only if the spouse is divorced or separated, or the parent or children die does this duty end. But a child up for adoption or abandoned has no further duties to support his natural parents.

These duties to care are most significant when someone else supports these relatives and makes a claim for payment. For example, some government unit like the state or county may support a parent or spouse, perhaps in a private home or institution. Quite often the children or spouse must pay for their care.

tutions is a direct duty of "responsible relatives." It continues even though the relatives cannot pay at the time. In one case the state charged a deceased parent's estate for the care of an incompetent adult child, for whom the parent could not pay during his life. For this care the obligation never ceases.

When a person pays for over one half of his parents' support, he can claim them as dependent for income tax purposes.

Do not confuse these care programs with social security benefits for which one has no duty to repay the government since the worker and his employer largely support the program.

Note: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.

• A child who gets into trouble may become a juvenile court ward and go to a home or a youth camp. Under the law, parents must provide for his support if they can. If they cannot, the state pays for part or all of the care.

• Qualified old persons can get old age assistance. To get this aid, the old person cannot own much property nor have much income, say, a small home and less than $1,200 of personal property plus income producing property of not over $5,000 assured valuation. A child or spouse who can help pay for their support must do so, depending on ability to support.

As a rule, no son-in-law or daughter-in-law need support the parents-in-law. If the daughter's assets are all in community property, the law as a rule does not make the daughter support the parents.

• Support for the mentally ill or inebriates in state institutions.

Army Pvt. Robert Romero Jr., whose father lives in Torrance, recently was assigned to the 87th Artillery, a Nike-Hercules missile unit at Fort MacArthur.

A cook in the artillery's Headquarters Battery, he entered the Army last September and completed basic training at Ft. Ord.

The 21-year-old soldier, whose mother, Mrs. Alice Rumley, lives at 2076 Garden Grove Blvd., Garden Grove, is a 1958 graduate of North Torrance High School in Torrance and attended El Camino Junior College.
